RECKLESS DRIVER STRIKES HYDRANT

About 8:40 o'clock Sunday night pedestrians and autoists in the vicinity of Mission street and Templeton avenue witnessed a geyser burst forth from a broken fire hydrant. Harry S. Bates, Jr., 26, of 1728 Jones street, San Francisco, traveling south on Mission street, in a new Lincoln coupe, side-swiped a Paige sedan owned and operated by August Lambardo, 42, of 40 Roach street, San Franicsco, who was traveling north on Mission street.

After the collision, Bates' coupe crashed into the fire hydrant at the intersection of Mission street and Templeton avenue, breaking off the hydrant. Then came the deluge of water.

Someone turned in a fire alarm, and the volunteer firemen and a crew of men from the municipal water company responded, and shut the water off.

Bates was arrested by Officers Sunderland and Reardon and booked on a charge of reckless driving. He will appear before Judge Ellis C. Johnson this Friday morning at 10 o'clock, to explain his action.

LOCAL MERCHANTS HOLD FINE MEETING

There was an unusually large attendance at the regular meeting of the Daly City Merchants' Association last Wednesday evening.

The main feature of the evening was the address of County Clerk E. B. Hinman, of the Citizens' Harbor Development committee of Redwood City. Mr. Hinman showed himself to be master of the subject, and thoroughly familiar with all of the phases of harbor development. He pointed out that the shore line of the Bay on the easterly side is dotted with industrial and manufacturing plants, while the westerly side of the Bay continues undeveloped, largely on account of the absence of harbor facilities in San Mateo county. He also said that the government favors such improvement, and unless we take advantage of this opportunity for assistance through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, San Jose probably will.

The secretary read communications from the Market Street Railway Company, explaining and favoring the operation of street cars by one man instead of two. It was said that such operation of street cars is safe, economical, and will not mean the discharge of employees and the contributing further to the list of unemployed, but will mean more cars and better service and increased safety. Any such change would be made gradually, so that no employees would be laid off, as there are constant resignations and other circumstances which would absorb the gradual reduction of the working force. This system has been in operation in South San Francisco since May 27, 1932.

The Board of Fire Commissioners were present, and extended an interesting discussion of the prospective sale of fire-works for the Fourth of July celebration was had. It was announced that the sale of fire-works would be allowed for about ten days prior to the Fourth.

The committee for the annual picnic, which will be held at Oak Cove Park, near San Mateo, on Sunday, August 13, has been working diligently and the merchants will give a picnic which will surpass anything before attempted. There will be plenty for everybody, and everybody welcome.

The next regular meeting of the Daly City Merchants' Association will be held at the City Hall Auditorium, Wednesday evening, July 5, at which everybody is welcome who wish to attend, but it is important that all merchants, business and professional men attend these meetings and take an inteerst in the welfare of the community.

W. H. CLAY,
Recording Secretary.

VETERAN POPPY DRIVE A SUCCESS

The Buddy Poppy drive is over. The members of Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, want to take this method of thanking every citizen of Daly City for the wonderful manner in which they responded to our appeal in the sale of the Buddy Poppy for the benefit and care of the disabled, sick and needy veteran and his family. Through the generosity of the people this magnificent work can be carried on in our community. We wish also to public thank the Daly City Record for the space that has been alloted us in the past few weeks in advertising this worthy cause.

The delegates were in attendance at the Department convention, which was held at Las Vegas, Navada, June 4 to 7, inclusive. Much work was scheduled there, and we only regret that it was held at such a distance that the people of this community could not get the benefit of the principles propounded by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

The work in forming the United Veteran Council of San Mateo county is progressing favorably, and we hope to soon have it operating in the various parts of the county affected. We are sure that as soon as it is in working order, and properly functioning, all will note the results immediately.

Plans are being worked out for a large public meeting to be held in July, when members will be recipients of awards to which they are qualified, such as the Purple Heart, designating injury in battle, and the Verdun Medal, those who served in battles in the Verdun section. This meeting will be something that every one will want to attend, and ample notice will be given so that the largest number possible can attend. This meeting will be open to the public.

The Ladies' Auxiliary

Mrs. Campbell and Mrs. Pechenino left Saturday as delegates to the Department convention at Las Vegas.

A whist was held Thursday night of last week, the proceeds of which were used to defray the expenses of the delegates, and as usual was very well attended.

FRED R. LINSER, Adjutant.

Crocker School Graduates Are Given Skating Party

Last Friday, June 2, the graduating class of Crocker school were the guests of the Crocker P. T. A. at a most enjoyable skating party at Iceland Rink. They started out a little after noon chaperoned by Mrs. J. E. Walker, Mrs. Katch and Mrs. Pauw. Most of them were bundled up for wintry weather as the expectations were that the party would be an ice skating one. There was some disappointment when it was discovered upon their arrival at the rink that they must roller skate instead but they were exceedingly good sports, and entered into the spirit of the day with good grace.

For almost three hours they had the time of their lives, and the chaperones enjoyed watching them as much as they enjoyed skating. Those who were unable to be there certainly missed a royal good time, and the party will be looked back upon by the graduates as one of the high lights of their graduation. For the past five years it has been the custom of Crocker P. T. A. to give to the graduates of Crocker school a farewell party, and they are happy that the one this year was such a success.

UNEMPLOYED HAVE WOOD TO EXCHANGE

The Unemployed Co-operative Relief Association will hold a weekly meeting every Monday evening at their warehouse, 190 San Diego avenue. We have been hauling wood to our members for the past two weeks from our wood job at Coyote Point in San Mateo county. We are now able to barter approximately 50 to 75 cords of wood for groceries, vegetables, meats, or any other commodity, whereby we may be able to help our members or those in need. At present we have contacted merchants as follows: drug store in South San Francisco, wood for drugs, etc.; hardware store in Daly City, wood for hardware, paints, etc.; shoe repair shop in Daly City, wood for repairing of shoes. Any merchant willing to take wood in exchange for commodities should communicate with our warehouse at 190 San Diego avenue. We will have a phone installed at our warehouse by Saturday, June 10. FLAG OBSERVANCE URGED BY LEGION

The San Mateo County Council, American Legion, held its regular meeting in Belmont, Friday, June 2. Daly City Post No. 410 was represented by Comrades Crane, Trier, Cornell and Hill.

Comrade Stillwell, Northern California Unemployment Relief chairman, spoke of work carried on through the department. As the present San Mateo county unemployment registration does not distinguish veterans, he requests all ex-service men to re-register, giving the dates of entering and leaving the service. It is very important that this be done at once so that San Mateo county ex-service men may get their share of the work on Federal projects carrying the "veterans preferance" clause.

The next County Council meeting will be held in Burlingame, Friday, July 7.

The regular meeting of Daly City Post will be held on Wednesday, June 14, in Legion Hall, 474 San Diego avenue.

This year the American flag will be 156 years old. On June 14, Flag Day, let's all make it our duty to see to it that "Old Glory" is displayed from every business house and from every home in Daly City.

Flag Cautions

1. Do not permit disrespect to be shown to the flag of the United States of America.

2. Do not dip the flag of the United States of America to any person or anything. The regimental color, State flag, organization or institutional flag will render this honor.

3. Do not display the flag with the union down except as a signal of distress.

4. Do not place any other flag or pennant above or, if on the same level, to the right of the flag of the United States of America.

5. Do not let the flag touch the ground or the floor, or trail in water.

6. Do not place any object or emblem of any kind on or above the flag of the United States of America.

7. Do not use the flag as drapery in any form whatsoever. Use bunting of blue, white and red.

8. Do not fasten the flag in such manner as will permit it to be easily torn.

9. Do not drape the flag over the hood, top, sides or back of a vehicle, or of a railway train or boat. When the flag is displayed on a motor car, the staff should be fixed firmly to the chassis, or clamped to the radiator cap.

10. Do not display the flag on a float in a parade except from a staff.

11. Do not use the flag as a covering for a ceiling.

12. Do not carry the flag flat or horizontally, but always aloft and free.

13. Do not use the flag as a portion of a costume or athletic uniform. Do not embroider it upon cushions or handkerchiefs nor print it on paper napkins or boxes.

14. Do not put lettering of any kind upon the flag.

15. Do not use the flag in any form of advertising nor fasten on advertising sign to a pole from which the flag is flown.

OCEAN SHORE FILES SUIT FOR DAMAGES

The Ocean Shore Railroad Company last Saturday demanded $50,000 from Joint Highway District No. 9 and A. J. and J. L. Fairbanks, Inc., San Francisco contractors, for asserted damage to its railroad tunnel at the west end of Pedro Point by blasting during preliminary work on the coast boulevard project several years ago. The company claims it rendered the tunnel "unfit for railroad purposes."

The suit, filed in Superior Court by Attorney Henry E. Monroe, is an aftermath of the recent dismissal by Superior Judge Maxwell McNutt of the $112,0000 valuation placed on the old railroad right-of-way for highway purposes.

Within the past three years, the defendants, without consent of the plaintiff, "blasted great masses of earth in the tunnel," making it unfit for future use, it is alleged. The bore is described as a "double track, standard gauge railroad tunnel."

Contract for construction of the Pedro mountain unit of the Coast boulevard was let to the Fairbanks for $106,000. Before the work had progressed far, the railroad company secured an injunction halting construction on the grounds that the highway district had not obtained title to the land. Negotiations for the purchase were then under way.

LONDON CONFAB STIRS UP HOPE

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

Good effects are confidently expected from the delberations of the World Economic Conference to begin Monday at the Geological Museum, South Kensington, London. Delegates from all the principal countries on the globe will be present and an attempt will be made to bring order out of the chaos that exists everywhere at this moment.

The United States should be able to hold its own with the keenest intellects assembled by other nations, as it is represented by Secretary of State Cordell Hull; James M. Cox, once a candidate for President; Senator Key Pittman of Nevada; and Congressman S. D. MsReynolds. There will be plenty of talk along altruistic lines, but in the final analysis decisions will be made that are dictated by practical considerations.

It is realized that the economic problems of the various countries are largely domestic, and consequently the scope of the World Conference, dealing, as it will, with international matters, will be somewhat limited. Nevertheless, such an important subject as the stabilization of currencies cannot be overlooked and even a partial solution of that intricate matter will be a big help to universal recovery.

There is a growing disposition that the United States and Canada will be pretty much in harmony when it comes to the currency puzzle, and such happy unison is a good omen for the conference. Strength of important dimensions will come from unanimity of opinion of the delegates from the two powerful nations of the North American continent.

International trade is at a low ebb and normality must be restored at an early day. That is urgent. There could be no better place than the London Conference for a beginning at least, in the straightening out of the exchange tangle. With stabilization in the currencies will come as a matter of course a tremendous upgrade movement of commerce between the nations.

One of the first tangible results of the meeting, it is hoped, will be an agreement on progressive removal of restrictions on exchange.

A. J. Smith, financial editor of the Vancouver Sun, tells in a graphic manner of the millions of new wealth in the Bridge River gold mining area. As the increased output of gold is one of the most vital things necessary to put the world back on an even keel, it is worth while to glance at the expert's "story."

We are informed that the district is a golden valley full of sunshine and busy men, with magnificent mountain vistas, lakes teeming with trout and, in the evenings, deer standing in the streams to drink. On a recent visit of members of the Board of Trade of Vancouver, automobiles were observed winding around the road that curls through mountain passes and trucks loaded with lumber and supplies moving to scenes of new townsites. As we have pointed out on other occasions, there is no industry comparable to mining in stirring up activities in divergent industries.

Editor Smith writes that fully five hundred men are employed in the district and subsidiary activities, and more are coming into the district as development expands. In a year it is predicted the population and output of the district will be doubled. One mine alone grossed more than $200,000 in one month this spring.

Hercules Consolidated Mining, Smelting and Power Corporation is reported to be planning extensive operations on its holdings in the Cariboo. Revival of mining in the famous old Cariboo is one of the signs of the times and indications are immense wealth overlooked, or at least, not taken out by the old-timers, will be removed in these later years.

OCEAN VIEW CIRCUS

Circus days will be here again when the big three-ring show opens at the Ocean View playground, Friday evening, June 16. The circus is being given by the children and they have worked hard to assure you of a real evening of good fun and excellent entertainment.

A number of special events have been arranged to add to the usual program of novelty acts. Greyhound races, pole vaulting, magicians, dancing girls, a drum corp and brass band are just a few of the attractions.

The admission price is ten cents. Don't forget next Friday night.

OPPOSES GARBAGE DUMP IN COUNTY

Noting in the newspapers the statement that the officials of the City of San Francisco are attempting to prevail upon Governor Rolph to veto the sewage disposal bill (A. B. 2123), I consider it important that the people of San Mateo county be informed as to what this bill provides for us, and that they be urged to insist upon our Governor signing the bill.

Mr. Craig, of Orange county, introduced the original bill for the protection of his county, but met with strong opposition because it provided that there must be "unanimous consent of the board of supervisors of the county onto whose lands or into whose waters the sewage would be deposited." The bill was accordingly amended at my insistence to include "garbage or other substances," and providing that any such deposit or discharge, if made on land, must be "properly covered by soil in a manner approved by the health authorities of such county in which the discharge or deposit is made." I also insisted that the words "or city and county" be added, so that there might be no possible question about San Francisco being included.

There was a strong effort made to amend the bill so that a bare majority of the board might give such permission, but I was successful in making it read "without the consent by resolution of four-fifths of the members of the board of supervisors."

This bill, as finally amended by me in the Senate, was unanimously passed, and it is my opinion that our civic and commercial organizations, as well as those citizens who are building and developing their homes in San Mateo county, should immediately demand that Governor Rolph sign the bill.

As soon as signed, I believe it will stop the garbage collectors of San Francisco from depositing the city's wet garbage on the water front near Bayshore and Brisbane, and also prevent the city from using Mills Field for such purpose. It would also probably prevent the disposal of San Francisco's wet garbage by hauling it onto the hog farms, for which purpose it is rumored the city intends to lease part of the jail property. It will, also, prevent the city from discharging any part of her sewage in our county in the manner in which I understand they proceeded when they began delivering garbage at Bayshore.

It will at least make it obligatory for the San Francisco officials to apply to the San Mato county supervisors and necessary for the supervisors to at least go through the motions of passing a resolution, in which event our citizens may know what is proposed and have the opportunity of protesting if they so desire.

Furthermore, in case four out of five of our supervisors deem it advisable to allow San Francisco to continue to dump her wet garbage on our bayshore or at Mills Field, or even if they should be persuaded to permit the discharge of San Francisco sewage here, we may, even then, have some protection through the supervision and watchfulness of our health authorities.

It is probable that San Francisco's attempt to prevail upon Governor Rolph for a veto of this bill is because of her desire to proceed with the dumping of all her undesirables in our beautiful county without hindrance, but San Mateo county should wake up and make herself heard in no uncertain language.

H. L. PARKMAN,
State Senator.

TENDERED SURPRISE SHOWER

Last Thursday evening the members of La Fiesta Club tendered Mrs. Lorraine Wall a surprise baby shower at the home of Mrs. Elsie Thomsen (nee Fahy), on Bellevue avenue. Mrs. Collista Davis, president of the club, presented Mrs. Wall with a beautiful child's wardrobe, matching a crib previously received from the club as a token from the members and several miscellaneous gifts. The dining room was artistically decorated, the color scheme being pink, blue and yellow. In the center of the table was a huge maypole, with colored streamers attached, and at the end of each streamer was a doll colorfully dressed. At Mrs. Wall's place of honor was a doll, sitting in a small high chair, beneath a bower of baby roses and fern, representing the Queen of the May, while roses and fern ran through the center of the table. The table favors were colored storks. A delightful chicken dinner was served to the following members: Mesdames Edna Petersen, Collista Davis, Marge Kennedy, Louise Eliasen, Lorraine Wall, Sylvia Fischer, Annette Drury, Misses Nonie Healey, Marge O'Connor, Audrey Diamond, Eleanor Boyle, Tessie O'Connor, and Mrs. Thomsen. Flashlights were taken of the guests seated at the table.

Poor old Hindenburg! Who could have thought he would ever become a Nazi rubber stamp?

EAGLES VICTORS IN SNAPPY GAME

Daly City Eagles celebrated their homecoming with a 2 to 0 victory over the Hesperian Druids, last Sunday, on the Jefferson high school grounds.

The game was a pitching duel between Babe Pierotti for our Eagles and Charlie Fouts for the Druids. Both pitched great ball, with Babe coming out on top only because he kept the six hits he allowed well scattered, struck out twelve batters and was backed up by errorless support. Fouts also pitched good ball, pitching himself out of several tight holes to keep the score down.

Dave Johnson, local high school star, played shortstop in great style and really looked good in George Rettig's old spot. We regret having lost George, who has been one of the Eagles' most consistent hitters and had a great following with Daly City fans. Martinelli, a husky youngster, made his first appearance in an Eagle uniform and turned in a great game at second base, a spot that has been the Eagles' weakness all winter. Scotty McDonald almost cinched the game in the very first inning, leading off with a three base hit and scored what proved to be the big run on a fielder's choice to short. Smith made a sensational running catch in deep center field; in fact the playing of the entire team featured. Campbell at first base stood out for the Druids with three hits.

Next Sunday, on the Jefferson high grounds, the Eagles will play at 2 P. M. Come on, you lovers of good clean baseball; get out and root for the boys.

Palo Alto Man Killed In Automoblie Accident

Thomas T. C. Gregory, 54, prominent San Francisco attorney, classmate and confidante of former President Hoover, was kiiled near Napa, about midnight Sunday, when his machine crashed through a bridge guard rail and hurtled 40 feet into a creek.

Gregory was graduated from Stanford University with the class of 1899. He was director and legal adviser to a number of California corporations, and a trustee of Stanford.

During the World war, Gregory served as Captain in the "Grizzlies" of the A. E. F., and was associated with Hoover in Europe as one of the original members of the American relief administration. Following the war he directed the Central European American relief, feeding people and reinstating economic interchanges between central and southeastern Eurepean countries.

When he was graduated from the Stanford law school in 1901, Gregory became a deputy district attorney in Solano county, where he was born at Suisun, October 4, 1878. In 1903 he was elected district attorney of the county and held that office until 1907, when he established his practice in San Francisco.

Grace Presbyterian church enjoyed a surprise tea party after the church service Sunday evening, when the ladies served refreshments to those attending the service. It gave the members an opportunity to get acquainted. Beginning Monday at 9 A. M., the Church Vacation School will commence, when children are invited to attend and enjoy the singing and craft work. A load of wood has been donated by the Niles Box Factory for the boys and the girls will enjoy making rag rugs under the guidance of Mrs. Morales. Children's Day will be observed on June 18 at the evening service, 7:45, and the children will prepare for it in the Vacation School. On Sunday morning, Rev. John Stevenson will preach on "Ye Must Be Born Again." In the evening a popular gospel service will be held at 7:45. Strangers are always welcome at this church, which is located at Hanover and Evergreen.

MALONEY FAVORS LEGALIZED RACING

"Substitute truth for hypocrisy!"

With that ringing challenge, Assemblyman Thomas Maloney, of San Francisco, one of the proponents of the racing bill that will face the state's electorate on June 27, addressed four luncheon clubs in the bay city last Saturday. Assemblyman Maloney spoke to these four San Francisco associations, comprising 75 per cent of the civic and business enterprises of the city, regarding the campaign now under way to obtain a sucessful vote at the polls on Proposition Number Three.

The little man from San Francisco, a native Californian and a lover of outdoor sports all his life, has been one of the champions of thoroughbred racing in the state for years. This time, in company with Assemblyman Woolwine of Los Angeles, he led the fight in the Legislature for the passage first of the bill that that Governor Rolph vetoed following his strange trip to the San Simeon ranch of William R. Hearst.

Then Maloney and Wollwine followed the words of Governor Rolph, voiced at the time the Governor rescinded the racing measure—"that the bill be brought before the voters at the June 27 election." A bill was passed enabling this measure to go to the polls and thus Proposition Number 3 finds its way before the state's electorate.

Maloney's direct fight to bring legalized racing to California is based on several vital points, outstanding ones being the truth that at present thoroughbred racing and its attendant betting is going on in California, with the state receiving neither a tax or revenue; that a "No" vote will neither curb or stop racing or betting, but a "YES" vote will bring the sport and betting under state supervision and regulation; that the state is being deprived of a just and needed revenue and the taxpayers are deprived of tax relief for which they are in sore need; that the sport can be made, and will give relief to unemployment out of funds collected as tax and revenue; and then the truth that thoroughbred racing, under state supervision, will be made to pay for the support of the State Fair and other citrus fairs, at this moment all faced with discontinuation due to lack of financial support.

Commenting on Proposition Number 3, Assemblyman Maloney said:

"This amendment looks the facts in the face. It recognizes the fact, which evehy thinking citizen knows, that we do have wagering in California.

"Adoption of this amendment does not 'bring gambling back.' The human desires to gamble cannot be stamped out by legislation. Centuries of history prove this fact. Those who oppose this measure on moral grounds fail to recognize this fact.

"Proposition No. 3 applies strictly to horse racing. It provides for the regulation and the safeguarding of existing racing and wagering thereon in California so as to assure the state of California an income from racing and to guarantee the public an honest and correct return of monies wagered.

A "YES" vote on Proposition No. 3 will bring millions of dollars to the farmers for the purchase of hay and grain, and will save the State Fair and other similar expositions.

"It will substitute truth for hypocrisy".

MEETING OF CROCKER P. T. A.

The last regular meeting of the Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association was held in the school building on Tuesday, May 16. Mrs. Orvilla D. Pauw, the unit's delegate to the convention at Long Beach, gave a very excellent report to the group. Plans for the graduation party were discussed. Mrs. G. Katch was chosen chairman of the committee to make arrangements for either an ice skating or a roller skating party at the rink in San Francisco. The graduates' mothers were also extended invitations to attend the affair. Mrs. Helen Grantham was chosen to present the prizes to the children who won in the recent poster contest, sponsored by the unit. After a short business meeting, the members adjourned to meet again when the group will picnic at the Fleishacker playgrounds on Tuesday, June 13.

CALIFORNIA NEWS REVIEW

Plans to protect fish and game in the Ninth Corps Area during occupation of camps by members of the Civilian Conservation Corps were announced at San Francisco. Workers and officers will require fishing and hunting licenses in sections where such credentials are necessary, Maj.-Gen. Malin Craig announced. Officers have been ordered to enforce strictly fish and game conservation laws.

Frank H. Mogle of Chino was named supervisor of the Fourth District of San Bernardino county by Governor Rolph, succeeding Milton P. Cheney, deceased. Mogle, who was born in the county forty-two years ago, had the recommendation of the American Legion, of which he is a past commander, and A. B. Miller of the State Board of Agriculture. There were eleven other candidates for the position.

Vegetable growers of Northern Santa Barbara county have reduced their spring and summer croi acreages in the hope of obtaining better prices for their commodities. A survey of acreage to be planted and harvested between May 1 and September 1 has been made by W. B. McNutt, agricultural inspector for the county, in which a reduction of 32 per cent in total acres to be harvested is revealed.

Plans for consolidated ferry service and virtually union station facilities for passengers on the three transcontinental railroads were announced recently at San Francisco. The Western Pacific Railroad will run its passenger trains in and out of the Oakland pier of the Southern Pacific Company, and passengers will use S. P. ferries. Similar arrangements have been made between the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe Railroad.

Legality of the William Hornblower act, calling for an election on June 27 of delegates to a state convention to decide on repeal of the eighteenth amendment, was approved by the State Supreme Court without comment. In approving the election, the Supreme Court denied a petition for a writ filed by southern California interests to hold up the vote. Anti-repeal adherents from southern California were headed in the petition by Richard M. Cannon.

Sanford M. Anderson of Inglewood was elected president of the California Building-Loan League at the closing session of its twenty-eighth annual convention at Yosemite National Park. President Anderson in his acceptance speech declared in favor of an immediate advertising campaign by building and loan associations to encourage home ownership and home building. He lauded the California press for the stabilizing influence it has exerted during the depression.

The movement for a world's fair in San Francisco, on completion of the transbay and Golden Gate bridges, had received new impetus with the Downtown Association supporting the plan. In an announcement by its directorate the Downtown Association urged the name Bridges of Progress Exposition, that the fair be self-liquidating, of six months' duration, and that naval strength of all nations be asked to concentrate here at the time.

Daniel H. Blood, state director of natural resources, and Dr. J. M. Toner, director of institutions, both recently slated for removal by Governor Rolph, appeared secure in their jobs for a while longer. The Governor indicated he will retain Blood temporarily after receiving a communication in which James H. Burke, Visalia attorney, declined to accept the position because of press of legal work. Rolph said he will make further efforts to "draft" Burke for the job. Dr. Toner has asked to be transferred to other duties, but Rolph said he hasn't found a place for him. Dr. June Harris, Sacramento physician, may be offered the directorship of institutions.

Governor Rolph intends to say "Three Cheers" when American governors assemble at Sacramento in July for the annual Conference of Governors and he intends to say it with flowers. He called in State Gardener William Vortriede recently and directed him to lay out a large flower bed on the lawns north of the Capitol Building with red, white and blue blossoms spelling out the words: "Three Cheers For The Good Old U. S. A." This proposed floral greeting to the visiting State executives will be in addition to elaborate artillery salutes being planned by Rolph with National Guard authorities. Governors will receive salutes of nineteen guns apiece instead of seventeen as in past years.

California cotton crops last season brought the highest average yield per acre that has ever been produced in the state, it was reported by E. E. Kaufman, statistician of the federal-state crop reporting service. An average of 503 pounds was produced from 123,000 acres, giving a total production of 129,371 bales, each weighing 500 pounds.

Damage estimated at $130,000 was done by a fire which destroyed the Lindsay Farm Bureau Fruit Association packing house.

A total of 11,110 persons, representing 2684 families, have gone off the San Francisco city relief since March 25 because of new jobs, as seen in figures given recently by Charles M. Wollenberg, relief director. "Advent of beer alone cannot account for the increase in work," Wollenberg said. "A slight pickup in general business seems to be the explanation." The record high mark for relief was on March 25, just before the drop began, when those being aided touched a peak of 74,881. There are at the moment 63,763 persons dependent upon the city, representing 14,118 families.

Kings county ground squirrels were given a clean bill of health by the State Department of Health, after examination of a large number of the animals taken from Avenal Creek district by County Agricultural Commissioner Haupt, following a report that the squirrels in that section were "dying of bubonic plague." Two representatives of the State department, with Commissioner Haupt, killed and examined approximately 800 squirrels and while they found disease among them, they definitely announced that there was no sympton of bubonic plague and that the conditions are not serious.

State budget balancing problems were further complicated with announcement by Franchise Tax Commissioner Charles J. McColgan that the State's income from banks and business corporations shows a 30 per cent drop. The State levy of 4 per cent on net incomes of 1931-32 brought in $2,932,137 for the ten months ending April 30, 1933, McCoglan said. Comparable revenues for ten months ending April 30, 1932, came to $4,312,-265. The decrease, according to State Finance Director Rolland A. Vandegrift, is greater by from $500,000 to $750,000 than the figure calculated in estimating State franchise taxes toward meeting the new budget.

Electing new officers and retaining others, the State Nurses Association ended its five-day annual convention at Los Angeles recently. Mrs. Harriet Fleming of Ontario was re-elected president, and Dr. Edith S. Bryan of Berkeley, first vice president. Miss Dora Saunby of San Francisco was named second vice president. Mrs. Gabrielle Mulvane of San Bernardino and Miss Matilda Harris of Oakland, secretary and treasurer, respectively, will hold their offices for another year. Miss Helen Hartley of Stockton was re-elected to the board of directors and Mrs. Margaret Krathaus of Santa Monica was placed on that body.

Advisory and executive committee members of the California Newspaper Publishers' Association met recently at Santa Barbara to discuss plans for the next annual State convention of the group in that city in January. Problems of the tourist industry also were discussed. Col. Samuel G. McClure, publisher of the Santa Monica Outlook, outlined a plan for telling California tourist attractions of California. Dan L. Beebe, president of the State association, presided at the short session in the morning and again in the afternoon. Don Thomas, director of the All-Year Club of Southern California, talked briefly on "Know Your Own California," and described plans for disseminating information on the State's many places of interest.

California's champion mother died suddenly in Fairfax, Marin County, recently. Mrs. Albert J. Kistle, 44-year-old mother of twenty living children, succumbed following a sudden attack just two months after the birth of her last child, named in honor of the President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt Kistle. She had no twins or triplets and the birth of her last son divided her family into ten boys and ten girls. In 1930 Mrs. Kistle and her family won fame at the state fair by taking the prize offered for the largest family in the state. At that time there were only seventeen children. President Roosevelt, on being informed of the naming of a member of the Kistle family in his honor, sent a letter of thanks and a handkerchief for the child as a souvenir.

Reflecting a marked upward swing in California construction work, average monthly building permits in nine key cities, includng San Francisco, totaled $6,101,460 for the first four months of 1933 compared with $3,344,-763 for corresponding months in 1932. Col. Carlos W. Huntington, state director of professional and vocational standards, said that San Francisco's monthly average this year has been $3,991,639; contrasted with $1,368,-993 in the early part of last year. The 1933 monthly averages of building permits in other key cities surveyed by Huntington were: Los Angeles, $888,-548; Long Beach, $613,048; Oakland, $120,000; San Diego, $118,000; Sacramento, $196,000; San Jose, $111,418; Fresno, $49,393; Stockton, $13,171. "While we are still below the mark for the same period in 1931," said Huntington, "the figures represent an increase of more than $2,000,000 in the average monthly building permits of these cities, and this upturn is a highly encouraging sign."

A $50,000 fire, starting from an automobile, destroyed practically half the business section of the little town of Groveland, located on the Big Oak Flat road to Yosemite Valley, thirty miles south of Sonora. Groveland residents were aided in fighting the fire by the state fire truck from Sonora and 200 men from the Buck Meadows reforestation camp, backed by residents of nearby towns. Fire fighters said the blaze started from a short circuit in a car in the Feretti Garage and spread to three business establishments and seven residences.

Easy-to-Make Smart Accessories

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IN MATTER of adorning, flattering accessories the present fashion program is nothing less than exciting. Did one ever see a more fascinating array of knick-knacks and furbelows made of organdie, pique, linen and other likable washable weaves as add the "touch that tells" to our costumes these days!

The best part of the story is that these intriguing trifles, which carry such an unmistakable air of feminine charm, are so inexpensive they are within the reach of all, and if one can sew even a little, or crochet, one can dress with the aid of these embellishing little fantasies, which are so easily made, to look like "a million" at a cost next to nothing.

The new organdie blouses are adorable. The model at the top in the picture is especially attractive, being styled after a unique pattern which stresses a novel high girdle effect done in tucks, together with the fact that it is handmade, gives it an exclusiveness all its own. Why not copy this dainty blouse? In running the tucks be sure to use the best of thread. Take infinitely fine stitches for best results. By the way, it's fashion-wise to wear with your light gray or string-colored suit either a navy or brown organdie blouse. In handmaking these you can get thread an exact match which does not fade with 'aundering.

The capelet centered to the right in the group is a "darling." It also is made of organdie, white of course, for white organdie fixings are so crisp and immaculate they freshen up even the most jaded gown. One of these dainty little fichulike organdie capes ought to be included in every up-to-date wardrobe. They are positively fetching worn with flowery chiffons or over pastel crepe frocks. The cunningest sort of patterns are easily available. If you are clever at making rolled hems (it's no trick at all after you know how) finish the edges in that way, for it adds greatly to the appearance of the cape to be so dainty hemmed.

About the most thrilling item brought out this season is the little jacket made either of pique or linen. All the young girls, the debutantes, their sisters, will be wearing some type or other of these linen or pique jackets before long. The model in the picture, to the left, intrigues because of its young looking lines and its smart detail. It has the fashionable round, collarless neck. The fastening is made decorative by nine buttons and "eye" buttonholes down the front. This is the simplest type of buttonhole to make. Crochet the little hat of mercerized cotton.

Speaking of crochet note the gloves the figure to the left below in the group is wearing. This resourceful young woman converts a pair of ordinary white fabric gloves into a high-style item by working an insert of hand crochet over the back of the hand and adding deep flaring crocheted cuffs (using mercerized crochet cotton). One could secure directions for crocheting at any fancywork department. The rippling collar which she wears is made of pique, the points so dovetailed as to achieve a sprightly flare. The other collar and cuff set is easily made of pique which is quilted with six-cord, number sixty thread, thus giving it a honeycomb effect. Its little bowties are especially attractive.

PLENTY OF VARIETY FOUND IN NECKLINE

How much attention are you paying to your neckline? It's all very well to concentrate on the hemline and the waistline provided you do not neglect the neck's best line. And if you like variety you'll have plenty of it this year. We'll start with the country neckline and work toward town.

The musician and artist bow tie combined with a Buster Brown collar is A-1 for the wide-open spaces. Also the silk scarf of bandanna wrapped around the throat and tied in a careless sort of fashion with the ends kicking around like a tomboy. The stock collar and riding suit when you're feeling horsey, and the knitted straight scarf looped over in front and fastened with a novelty pin are both happy ways of drawing the country neckline.

Those Mesh Pocketbooks Can Be Dug Out of Trunks

Speaking of mesh—you might as well begin looking for that gold and silver mesh pocketbook you packed away several years ago, because they are going to see fashionable daylight again in the summer. With them will come another cluster of "do-dads" on a ring—compact, lipstick, perfume and rouge—things that are too heavy to carry inside on account of breaking the delicate and precious metal links. They can be carried separately, or attached to the side of the purse.

Hats for Spring

Straw hats are marching out of Paris millinery salons, an army of them, and designed to wear from the crack of dawn until the hour of onion soup in the early morning. They are extremely varied in shape and in straw

BOWS AND PLEATS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Watch pleats! Already in Paris they are enjoying a big vogue. Many of the most successful evening gowns, especially those of monotone pastel chiffon, have skirts which are fine accordion or knife-pleated the whole way round. In the Lanvin gown to the left in this sketch pleats are discreetly and effectively treated. The idea of using wide pleats for the capelet in contrast to the finely pleated flounce on the skirt is very original and daring. And bows! It is impossible to overdo the bow fad. Fashion is "saying it" with bows every hour in the day and the night for evening frocks fairly revel in bow trimmings. The big bow which fastens the little capelet on the Lanvin gown is one way of interpreting the bow movement, while the conspicuous green velvet bows which distinguish the Patou evening gown of pink satin sketched to the right gives an entirely different impression of how bows and bows are being employed in the most "fetching" of the season's modes.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

Washington.—It begins to appear like the summer will be hot insofar as the prohibition controversy is concerned. Indeed, as the situation now is outlined, neither prohibitionists nor anti-prohibitionists propose to allow any grass to grow under their feet. The motto of each side seems to be: "now or never."

Battle to Wax Hot

Observers here believe that Postmaster General "Jim" Farley, continuing the political astuteness of the last campaign, rather caught the prohibitionists taking a nap. I mean that the prohibitionists were plodding along throughout the country with their efforts but were putting forth no real campaign attacks. Mr. Farley broke out suddenly with a brand new idea and laid the pressure of the Roosevelt administration on the movement to repeal the Eighteenth amendment.

Of course, when Mr. Farley told the country that by ratification of the repeal proposal it would automatically end the extra taxes that had to be levied under the public works bill, he was favored by a condition not available to the prohibition supporters. He was, therefore, in a position to offer some inducement that had not been presented before, while thus far the prohibition arguments have lacked any new elements of showmanship.

I advert to showmanship because it will be remembered that it was a type of showmanship that started the big repeal drive and worked the country up to fever heat on the prohibition repeal question through the last campaign and in the newly elected congress. Mr. Farley merely restored life to the movement. It is generally conceded that defections have occurred in the ranks of the anti-prohibitionists in rather large numbers. It is obvious, too, that the ardor was cooling in a good many sections of the country. Mr. Farley sensed those things and he capitalized the situation that was presented to him in an almost cut and dried form.

Thus, the postmaster general has again demonstrated his usefulness as the right hand of the President. Not only has he added to, or rather revived, the momentum of the repeal move but he has employed the circumstance to solidify the Democratic party organization. He addressed letters to thousands of party workers in the states where there may be some doubt as to the success of the repeal proposal. Those workers naturally are responding. It is obvious that some of them will balk at the idea but the information we get here is that the bulk of the party workers will do just the thing Mr. Farley has asked and will get busy for repeal as a party movement. The full effect of the postmaster general's quick move can be measured from the political standpoint.

It must not be overlooked that the drys are busy, too. For example, two great conventions recently were held in Washington. One was the Southern Baptist convention and the other was the Northern Baptist convention. One group engaged directly in the prohibition fight and adopted a resolution by which the delegates agreed to avoid patronizing businesses selling beer. The vote to adopt such a policy was lopsided, but one of the ministers told me he had some difficulty in finding a place to eat in the Capital City where no beer was sold. Nevertheless, the impracticability of such a policy does not overshadow the fighting spirit that is displayed.

Drys Are Not Idle

Another illustration: scattered throughout the auditorium where the sessions were held were signs and posters which read "No quarter to the liquor interest; thousands of quarters to fight them," or words to that effect.

These facts are cited because they constitute evidence of what is going on throughout the country. The instances were with reference to only one church, but there is much the same attitude on the part of all the churches. Their leaders and those who, though not participating directly in the church movement, are sincerely dry, are not going to be licked while they twiddle their thumbs. I recall having written in one of these letters several months ago that the question of repeal was probably going to be decided around the firesides of hundreds of thousands of homes in the land. The circumstances now developed convince me more strongly than ever that such will be the case.

The wets are claiming buoyantly that they will win repeal. Dry leaders here are just as certain that they can stop repeal. On the side of the wets is the gigantic vote they developed at the Chicago convention of the Democratic party and the compromise position forced on the Republicans in convention in the same city. The Republicans did compromise, because the resubmission plank did not represent the original position of either faction. On the other side, the drys point to the fact it is necessary for repeal to fail in only thirteen states to defeat the proposal that restores liquor control to the states. And when you look over a list of states, you will note a good many of them that have voted dry over and over again.

But we must not forget the powerful leverage that Mr. Farley exerted in the matter of taxes. I think it is a fact that there is not a state in the union where taxes are not the subject of complaint. The taxes laid by the federal government also have been criticized plentifully during the depression. So when the President says and congress agrees that additional taxes are necessary to pay for public work to stimulate business recovery, it is not unnatural that a mighty howl was heard. It always is easy to complain about taxes and it is easier to complain about them in hard times.

The Roosevelt administration, with Mr. Farley waving the magic wand, promptly told congress and the country that all of these new taxes could be repealed if prohibition would be repealed. They won't be in effect a month longer than the Eighteenth amendment, said the administration. Taxes from liquor will more than offset the levies lately put through by congress, for the records show that liquor taxes in the days before the Eighteenth amendment was adopted were yielding something like $350,000,-000 annually. The present addition to the tax list will produce only an estimated $225,000,000, so there will be some to spare if the old figures hold.

The country has just witnessed another "show" staged by a senate committee. This time, an investigation disclosed for the first time the secrets of the House of Morgan, the greatest private banking firm the world has ever known, and one about which there always has been a veil of mystery concealing its affairs from prying eyes. The firm of J. P. Morgan and company is a firm of 20 partners; from the inception of the organization by J. P. Morgan, the elder, late last century, people have known only that it was a banking firm of immense power, of almost limitless resources and one not subject to the laws governing commercial banking houses. The Morgan partners, as their number increased, always kept to the tradition that their business was their business and that despite the fact they constituted an institution of enormous power, their affairs should be treated like those of any other individuals.

Probe Morgan Secrets

But the senate thought otherwise. It instructed its banking committee to dig around and see what this giant in finance was. It has found out. The country has been shown, in a presentation as dramatic as any great playwright could have presented from his imagination, the naked truth about the House of Morgan. The senate majority that wanted to draw back the curtain on the Morgan bank are tickled about the job. Ferdinand Pecora, a Sicilian, who rose to considerable prominence in New York city, likewise is tickled about the job, for he was the lawyer hired by the committee to handle the case. And so another niche has been cut by a senate investigation.

It seems to me, however, that the senate is not entitled to be praised much for its job. After all, it may be asked properly what has been accomplished. It "exposed" the House of Morgan, it is true. It showed that J. P. Morgan, the younger, and the present head of the firm, escaped payment of income taxes in two years, and it got oodles of publicity for individual senators and Mr. Pecora, as well as smearing the names of some well known persons because they once had dealt with the House of Morgan. It showed as well that Mr. Morgan had used his brains to comply with the very tax laws congress enacted and yet had escaped tax because he had received no income as congress had defined that word.

One result may be, and I believe it is the only one, that there will be some revision of the tax laws to prevent a recurrence of the circumstance of one of the country's richest men escaping income tax. It is difficult to foresee anything else of a helpful nature that can come from the "show" staged by the senate committee. The reason is a practical and simple one. As explained above, the House of Morgan is a private banking firm which by long and honest operation has builded a confidence among the people of wealth who deposited their money with the private firm. It created good will just as the local merchant in your town has done, by preserving to those who were its customers the rights they were entitled to have. That local merchant, by the way, could accept money on deposit if he wanted to and his customers wanted to make them. There is nothing to prevent him from it.

Tax Revision Likely

Thus, through the years, the Morgan partners continued to receive funds on deposit until at last reports there was something like $255,000,000 on deposit with them. Like other big banks, the House of Morgan made much money. It made vast profit doing what commercial banks could not do without having another corporation handle the transactions, and that was sell securities.

CODDLING KIDNAPERS

At Harwichport, Mass., a few days ago a 10-year-old girl, Peggy McMath, was kidnaped and held in a squalid shack, without proper food, for nearly three days and nights. The mental and physical suffering of this innocent child can better be imagined than described.

Without going into detail, it may be said that she was finally released after relatives had paid over $60,000 to one of the kidnapers.

Two brothers, Kenneth and Cyril Buck, were arrested. All the ransom money was found in Kenneth's home, and after questioning he confessed the crime. Then what happened? The fiends were released on bond, and the case will doubtless drag its weary length through the courts, with the chances that a nominal punishment will be given to the perpetrators of the outrage.

The child told a harrowing story of having rags stuffed in her mouth to prevent an outcry; of tight cords tied about her arms, and imprisonment in a padlocked cell, with threats of being chloroformed if she attempted to give an alarm, and other indignities.

Yet the instigator of this unspeakable offence, and his brother who arranged for the ransom payment, are at large under a relatively small bond. Such judicial weakness, which amounts to a positive protection and coddling of kidnapers, is enough to make every decent citizen's blood literally boil with indignation. And some wonder at the prevalence of crime in this country.

NATURE AND BILLBOARDS

"To him who in love of nature holds communion with her visible forms, she speaks a various language."

So wrote William Cullen Bryant in his famous poem "Thanatopsis," published in 1817. Cargill, the cartoonist, takes this quotation as the caption for a cartoon depicting a motorist wending his way through a maze of billboards, which also "speak a various language," ranging from praise of El Punko cigars to an invitation to patronize the Rowdie Dow dance hall.

In terms more eloquent than pages of text, the cartoonist characterizes the present disgraceful marring of natural scenery by blatant and offensive billboards, which not only obscure the beauties of nature, but are in many instances a menace to traffic.

What would Bryant, poet and nature lover, say if he were to come back seeking inspiration for a modern "Thanatopsis?"

AWFUL POSSIBILITIES

Horrible as were some of the engines of death employed in the World war, they were probably far less destructive than those which might be brought into play in a future death struggle of nations.

Prof. Leonard Hill, in his address as president before a London sanitary association, recently cited one possibility which is terrifying in its implications. He declared that a certain kind of germ which can be easily cultivated is so deadly that a spoonfull suitably distributed could kill a million persons.

This is not the first time such measures for the extermination of troops and non-combatants alike in the event of another great war have been hinted at. And there is little use to argue that such diabolical means, if developed, would not be used.

Poison gas in warfare was condemned and agreements to avoid its employment were made long before the World war, but it was used with telling effect by both sides after the Germans resorted to it at Ypres in April, 1915. Our own experts declare that chemical warfare will play a far more important role in future wars. And there is not the slightest doubt that disease germs would be likewise employed if a practical method of doing so were developed.

With all these added horrors in prospect, it is little wonder that thoughtful persons everywhere are seeking to prevent another world tragedy, which might easily wipe out entire populations. Civilization must preserve peace, or perish by the instruments of destruction which it has created.

BROADENING OUR VIEW

Although many writers deplore the alleged lower standard of current magazines which are extremely popular with a certain class of people, reports from booksellers and librarians declare that there is a growing demand for the better sort of literature.

Works dealing with travel, history and biography are being called for in increasing numbers, especially those pertaining to foreign countries.

There is no doubt that the war and the important events which have followed it have given the American people a wider outlook on the world and a desire to know more of the countries and peoples which are playing such important parts in its affairs.

Newspapers generally, both dailies and weeklies, find their readers are interested in a wider range of topics than formerly, and are giving more space to news and editorials dealing with national and international matters.

This all means that the people of America, and particularly the rural population, are outgrowing the narrow provincialism of the past and are eager for contact with the rest of the world through books, newspapers, moving pictures and the radio. All of which makes for a higher and better civilization.

ABOUT INSANITY

In a bulletin of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene some enlightening information concerning insanity is given, which is not only interesting but valuable. It mentions a great many false notions held by the public regarding mental disorders, and gives instead of these the results of scientific research.

Some of the things science teaches today concerning insanity are these:

Insanity develops gradually; it is no more to be ashamed of than pneumonia or a broken leg; it is a disease and should have medical treatment; between 25 and 40 per cent of those treated are discharged recovered or improved. Shock of misfortune or grief may precipitate insanity, but does not cause it unless mental disorder already exists; there are usually symptoms which if recognized early may enable physicians to check the malady; there are many kinds of mental disorder, just as there are many kinds of physical ailments; "nervous breakdown" is really a mental condition in which there is rarely anything organically wrong with the nervous system.

In olden times an insane person was supposed to be possessed of a devil, and the poor wretch was often tortured to exorcise the evil spirit. Now we know that a crazy person is simply sick mentally and needs intelligent and humane treatment.

Furthermore, insanity is more or less comparative. Most of us are a little off at times.

EARNEST YOUNG PEOPLE

In spite of all the loose talk and writing about the wild youth of the present day, recent statistics from the Bureau of Education indicate that the percentage of earnest young people is still very high.

These statistics show that one-half of the young men and one-fourth of the young women in the colleges and universities of the United States are earning their schooling in whole or in part through working outside of school hours. In one year more than $33,000,000 was earned by the labor of students.

Among the part time jobs held by students are office work, automobile repairing, specialty selling, teaching, hotel and summer resort employment, household service, farm work and other activities.

In the face of such a showing as is being made, it can hardly be maintained that the young generation is as frivolous as its critics would have us believe.

Chicago's Century of Progress exposition will illustrate the advance of civilization, which has exchanged the bow, arrow and tomahawk for the machine gun and "pineapple."

ORIGIN OF DIXIE

An interesting account of how the South came to be known as "Dixie" is given on the authority of Fred W. Thompson, a Richmond banker, who says the term was first applied to money issued by a New Orelans bank before the Civil war, principally in $10 bills.

These bills, because of the large French-speaking population of Louisiana, were printed in French on one side and in English on the other. On the French side the word "dix," meaning ten, was quite prominent, and the Americans got to calling the bills "dixies."

From that Louisiana came to be know as the land of the dixies, or Dixie Land. Then Dan Emmett, a Northern minstrel, got hold of the idea and composed the song "Dixie" for a show performing in New York. The term Dixie soon came to be applied to the entire South.

And there you are—if Mr. Thompson is right.

RAT DAMAGE ENORMOUS

Damage by rats to produce and property amounts to 200 million dollars anually in the United States, according to an estimate by the secretary of agriculture of North Dakota, who recommends the waging of a constant and relentless campaign against this pest.

Measures recommended include keeping waste food and garbage in covered containers until destroyed; preventing accumulations of trash and refuse; making corn cribs and granaries rat-proof, and adopting any means whereby the supply of rat food may be reduced.

Among the means for destroying rats the most effective is poisoning, for which purpose goverment experts recommended powdered barium carbonate, which is inexpensive and has the added advantage of being odorless and tasteless, therefore more readily eaten by the rodents when it is applied to their bait. Care must be taken, of course, that it is not placed in the way of children or domestic animals. When poison can not be used, trapping is suggested as the next best method to be employed.

In addition to the property destruction they cause, rats tend to spread disease, and from every standpoint they are an unmitigated nuisance. A nation-wide rat extermination campaign might be considered as an aid to unemployment relief.

It appears that fixing depression-guilt is as difficult as fixing war-guilt.

CHAPTER I

It was a lonely land by a lonely sea, but Eric loved them both. One was his father—this great Alaskan country stretching one-ninth of the way around the world—and the old gray ocean, wearing a billowing cloak of mist, was surely his mother. The Sea has had many husbands—Phoenicia last night, Venice in the dawn, England and Holland and the little Yankee land in mid-morning, and to each she has borne a breed of giants—but now she has taken a younger, bolder lover in the North, and this wind-tanned youth on the Bradford cannery dock was a child of that mating.

His full name was Eric Ericssen. It was typical of the new species—it could as well have been Kris Nansen, or Nils Larsen, or Storker Storkersen. Like the other founders of the clan, his parents had come from Norway's windy coast first to dig for gold in Alaskan gravels, then more to their liking, to fish for halibut and salmon in the fiords of the Northwest. But neither Eric nor his clansmen were Norwegians. Born on Alaskan soil, they were the product of a new environment—new ways, waters, men, and minds.

As the son of a ship captain, of course he had had good schooling. At the close of his second year at the University of Alaska at Fairbanks, he had gone abroad to specialize in geography, ethnology, and economics—in the forec'stle of a tramp steamer. Now, still under thirty, he had papers entitling him to sail as master on any ship, of any tonnage, anywhere on the seven seas.

As he sat on the dock at Squaw Harbor any old Alaskan could tell his breed. Both his ancient mother and his young father had put their mark upon him. He was tall and lean, lithe and loose-jointed, by the Alaskan pattern; and he walked like a sourdough rather than a sailor, with a spring of his toes, lightly, swiftly, and tirelessly.

He sat alone, ignoring the motley crowd on the dock. He had little in common with Siwash slimers or Filipino messboys; even less with Sandomar's gang. There were ten of these men, all recently fired from the cannery force, and, like Eric himself, they were idly watching a sleek yacht, stranger to these waters, glide into the harbor.

In Eric's heart dwelt a strange love, deep and wide, for 'most all craft on all seas, but an amused half-smile flickered across his lips as he surveyed the stylish visitor. Obviously she was built for luxurious cruising, not to rough it in these half-charted northern waters. In venturing here she was surely living up to her name, the Intrepid.

The elderly captain docked her handily, and the gang-plank was run out. To Eric's amazement, the greater part of the crew immediately walked off. Not only the kit-bags in their hands but the gray, grim look on their faces told plainly that they were done with the Intrepid for the rest of their seafaring lives.

Eric spoke to the first officer, a stalwart Yankee type that he knew and respected. "Looks like she's going to be short-handed the rest of her cruise."

"There's six left, out of eighteen," the man answered angrily. "Our time's up, but he won't hit for home. Now he can cool his heels here, or else run the whole ship himself—as he's wanted to from the first. We're going to go out on the Catherine D."

"Who do you mean by 'he'? The skipper?"

"The old man's all right. I mean Horton, the millionaire who owns her. He's not a yachtsman, but he won't stay in the saloon. Always coming between his skipper and the crew. He has no respect for an officer, much less a sailor—he treats 'em all like flunkies. Our fellows are Americans — they won't put up with that. Besides, he expects the impossible. All his life he's got what he wanted, bought it with his checkbook, and he can't see why we can't supply the weather and the tides he demands. Tell him he can't go some place, and that's where he's going to start for."

The officer swore, throatily and emphatically and marched off. A burly, middle-aged man in smart yachting cap—no doubt Horton himself—now disembarked. With him was an athletic man of thirty, with a lean, scholarly face, thin lips, and icy gray eyes. Catching sight of Eric, Horton signaled him up with an imperious gesture.

"What's your name?"

Eric's sparkling blue eyes turned hard gray. "I am Mr. Ericssen."

"Do you want a job? I need some men, to replace those proud devils who just walked off. What can you do on shipboard?"

"Taking your questions one at a time—" Eric's quick anger had failed, and his lips twitched at the corners. "I might take a berth, provided I found a good one. I came as first officer of the Redmond, lying here through the season, and I expect to go out with her next fall. I have master's papers—and I might tell you that I'm a proud devil, too."

"I notice it." He turned to his young companion. "Roy, I think this chap will do for first officer." Then to Eric: "Those men over there look good to me. Would they do for my crew?"

Eric followed his gaze to find Sandomar's gang watching with lighted eyes, but he could not say that they looked good to him. They were here solely through a mistake made by Bradford's absent partner, the hiring, as foreman, of a seemingly honest trawler known as Swede. This pale-eyed, pale-haired thug had taken advantage of a labor shortage to call in, from up and down the coasts, vultures of his own feather promising not only lucrative employment but a chance for wholesale thievery of packed salmon cases. True the piracy had failed and the gang had been fired bag and baggage, but until the Catherine took them off Bradford would not sleep soundly.

A strange pack for a far place like Squaw Harbor! Swede was still its nominal leader, but its real chief was a former sea-otter poacher known as Sandomar, an enormous dusky-skinned Pole more gorilla than man. He had won his leadership in spite of what seemed a hopeless handicap, complete deafness. But always with him, like a jackal following a tiger, went an undersized ratty-eyed cockney who acted as his ears. This man, who seemed to have no name but "Garge," interpreted all he heard in a kind of shorthand sign language—a swift flicker of his fingers half the time unnoticed by his fellows. Sandomar was not a mute, and made his answers in a deep monotone.

Besides these two and Swede, there was a short, plump, oily-skinned poor white nicknamed Cooky; two pelagic sealers known as Big Smith and Little Smith; DeValera, not a Latin but a black Irishman; a renegade Australian called Sydney Bill; and two nondescript Russians, saboteurs and Reds, whose names never seemed twice the same.

"You don't want that gang," Eric told Horton. "They'd likely scuttle your ship and cut all your throats before you get back."

"Then how about taking some of Bradford's hands?"

Before Eric could answer, two others of the yachting party came down the gangplank and joined the group. One was a thin little woman in black, nimble and bright-eyed for all her more than seventy years: Eric suspected that she was Horton's widowed mother, the wife of the original founder of the fortune. The other, and Eric accepted it as sober fact, was probably graced beyond any soul that had ever set foot on these isles.

He would never forget his first glimpse of Nan Horton. On this raw coast, beside a savage sea, she was an alien and exotic spirit.

Blond viking of the North, Eric was drawn to dusky women. Her dark, proud little face, with dull-rose cheeks, held a trace of arrogance—no doubt she was willful and undisciplined as Horton himself, but her pointed hazel eyes were warmly lighted within their heavy dark fringe of lashes, clear, kindly, and strangely steadfast; and her mouth was wistful.

Eric returned to earth to hear Horton repeating his question, in impatient tones. "How about taking some of Bradford's hands, I say?"

Eric's expression quickly changed. "Bradford has none to spare."

"What if I offer double pay? That would fetch 'em, wouldn't it?"

"I don't think so. Besides, it would be mighty poor sportsmanship for a yacht owner like you to make such an offer."

Eric spoke slowly and quietly, and Nan Horton opened her clear, hazel eyes. Horton's rat-trap mouth grew hard. "I don't require any advice from you."

"You asked for it, and I'm going to give it to you. Bradford's short-handed anyway; if he loses any more men, just at the start of the season, he can't handle his fish. If you try anything like this, you can expect trouble."

"And you'll deserve it, too, Felix." It was the old woman's voice, clear as a bird's. "Your sport is not as important as Mr. Bradford's work, or any man's. Of course you can't steal his men."

"But that argument can be reduced to an absurdity," said the younger man called Roy. "If you start thinking of other people's interests instead of your own you'll soon find yourself in the sentimental soup. Don't you see that if we don't recruit our crew here, we'll have to loaf two weeks waiting for a fresh gang from Ketchikan?"

"I don't agree with you, Roy." It was Nan's contralto voice, with a 'cello-like richness of tone, and both men turned to her in surprise. "Usually I support you and Dad in 'the public be d—d' attitude, but somehow this doesn't seem to me to be playing the game."

"Nan, you're talking as though life is a cricket match, or a romance." Roy spoke lightly, yet with a flash of his cold eyes. Eric knew that here was a strong man—perhaps even stronger than the purse-proud millionaire. Felix Horton—who would likely win what he wanted from the world, whether it was wealth or power or Horton's daughter. "Go ahead, Felix, and take what men you need."

"That's what I propose to do." He turned to Eric. "Who's that chap in the mackinaw?"

"Johanessen, Bradford's dock foreman."

Johanessen was called up and questioned. Would he ship on the Intrepid for twice his present pay? He shook his blond head.

"I am werry sorry, but we iss short-handed, and I connot spare myself. You see, de feesh run pretty quick now, and we will all be dam' busy: I haf no time to go yachting."

He marched stolidly away; a girlish giggle escaped Mother Horton's pale old lips. Nan's gray eyes brightened perceptibly, and even Roy smiled faintly and knowingly. "Just what we could expect from the simple Nordic," Roy said.

But Horton's big jowls flushed. "I'll be hanged if I'm going to rot up here for two weeks. We'll take these bully boys there." He indicated Sandomar's gang. "They're a hard lot, but we can handle them, and maybe they won't be so haughty as those sterling Americans that just walked off. And Ericssen here will ship as first officer—"

Eric's eyes were not now the tint of deep water in the sunlight, but of Bering sea shoals under winter clouds. "I don't want the job. I don't care to work for you. You asked for it, and you've got it. I just saw you try to break up Bradford's force with the strength of your checkbook, and I'm not going to okay that, or help you make a cruise in our waters."

He was looking into Horton's face, so he did not see the quick flash, possibly anger, perhaps some other emotion, in his daughter's eyes. But as he turned away, he heard Mother Horton voice unqualified approval.

"I don't blame him a bit, Felix. If your father was alive, he'd say the same."

Eric turned to his snubbing block, but the matter was not yet closed. An entirely new light was thrown on it when the elderly captain sought Eric and recalled that they had met before. Their eyes grew brilliant as they recalled a dive in Jibuti; a strange, hair-raising, snaky dance by a nautch-girl, the tint of old ivory; and a chair-smashing row with half a dozen Arabs.

"I was a better man then than now," Captain Waymire said. "Five years makes a sight of difference. And maybe that's why I hate to face this cruise alone."

"You still have your chief engineer," Eric said.

"Yes, but he can't help me handle that pack of wolves I've just signed up." Then, man to man: "Ericssen, forget the boss' high-handed ways, and help me out. And I'm not speaking for myself alone."

Eric struggled in vain against rising curiosity. "Who are you speaking for?"

"Horton's girl. She asked me to talk to you. I think she approved of your stand, but like me, she's uneasy about those thugs. She won't admit it, but I know she is. Anyway, she wants you on the ship. And Ericssen, I want you, too. As another master mariner, I ask you to try to strain a point and help me out."

Eric's gaze wandered off to the deck of the yacht, on which stood a vivid figure. Curly dark hair blowing in the wind, dull-rose cheeks in the sunlight, and for one brief second, steady, tranquil, hazel eyes challenging his own. . . . Yes, this was a call he could hardly refuse. . . . And he was only twenty-eight, the possessor of two strong hands and a boy's heart fancy free.

"I'd be under your orders, not Horton's?"

"Yes. I won't let him interfere."

"When do you want to sail?"

"Right now. Sandomar and his crowd have already gone aboard."

"Wait till I get my kit-bag. I'm going, too."

SALMON A FISH OF GREAT VALUE

Supports a Vast Industry on Pacific Coast.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

SOME two thousand Chinook salmon from the Pacific coast, which were hatched in the aquarium of Washington's new Department of Commerce building, will be placed in Deep Creek lake, Maryland, whose waters drain into the upper Potomac. It is hoped the fish will find their way to salt water and return, in four years, to spawn, thus stocking the historic river.

Pacific salmon are the most valuable fishes, not only of the United States but also of the entire western hemisphere; and with the single exception of the sea herrings, they are commercially the leading fishes of the world.

In one year the aggregate catch of salmon in the Pacific states, British Columbia, and Alaska was upward of four hundred million pounds; which, as sold in a canned, salted, smoked, frozen and fresh condition, had a market value of about $27,750,000. The canned product alone, consisting of more than five million cases of 48 one-pound cans, was worth $25,500,000. Thirty-five thousand people were engaged in the different branches of the industry, and the invested capital was fully $30,000,000.

There are five distinct species of salmons, which, having many characteristics in common, nevertheless differ strikingly in size, color, habits, distribution, food value, and economic importance. The largest and most magnificent of all salmons is the Chinook, Quinnat, King, Spring, or Tyee salmon. It has an average weight of nearly 25 pounds in the Columbia river, and is often caught weighing 40 to 60 pounds, while occasionally examples of over 100 pounds are taken. While found from California to China, it attains its greatest abundance in the Sacramento, Columbia, Yukon and other large streams.

Blueback Has Its Faults.

The species called Blueback salmon on the Columbia, Sockeye on Puget Sound, and Redfish or Red Salmon in Alaska, averages only five pounds in weight and never exceeds twelve. It attains greatest abundance in the Columbia, the Fraser, and in various streams throughout Alaska. Its meat is rich in quality, deep red in color, and the fish is therefore in great demand for canning. While a beautiful fish when in salt water, with bright blue back and silver sides, after entering fresh water it deteriorates rapidly in food value and appearance, the head turns to olive green, and the entire back and sides become crimson and finally dark blood red.

The Silver or Coho salmon, with a general distribution in the coastal streams, averages six pounds in weight and rarely exceeds 25 or 30.

The smallest species is the Humpback, so called from the well-marked nuchal hump developed by the male in fall. The extremes of weight for mature examples are three and eleven pounds, with four pounds as the average. The region of greatest abundance is Puget Sound to southeast Alaska.

The remaining species, the Dog or Chum salmon, averages eight pounds in weight. It is generally distributed and abundant, but, owing to the poor quality of the flesh, is the least important of the group. The distortion of the jaws in the male during the breeding season, while characteristic of all species, is particularly marked in the Dog salmon.

The differences in spawning times and places of the different species of salmon are most interesting. After spending most of their lives at sea, growing, accumulating fat, and storing energy, the salmons move inshore and ascend the streams. After once beginning their upward journey, they take no food, and in fact are incapable of digesting and assimilating food.

Where They Spawn.

The Quinnat salmon begins to run in spring and pushes its way to the headwaters of the larger streams. In the Columbia basin the species distributes itself over 90,000 square miles of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana, its upward limit being insurmountable obstructions or falls. In the Snake river and Yukon river the spawning grounds lie 2,000 miles by water from the sea.

The spawning streams of the Red salmon are those that rise in lakes, and the spawning grounds are in the affluents of those lakes. The run begins in May and fish continue to come in until October, depending on latitude.

The Silver salmon enters the streams from July to October or November, but does not as a rule ascend for long distances.

The Humpback runs into fresh water in summer and fall, preferably in short coast streams, and often spawns within a few rods of the ocean.

The schools of Dog salmon come into the stream rather late; in the Columbia river and Puget Sound the run extends from August to late in November, and in Alaska the height of the season is about the first of September.

Now, whether the salmon travel in the streams 2,000 miles or 200 feet to reach their spawning grounds, and regardless of their physical condition at the time they arrive at the particular places required for the proper development of eggs and young, every individual of every species dies shortly after spawning. This is the most characteristic and remarkable event in the life of the Pacific salmons.

Why this is the case is one of nature's mysteries. It has its parallel in some other fishes, in the may-fly, which perishes after a few hours' existence, and in the annual plants. One can only say of such that they have served their purpose and are no longer needed.

Periods of Abundance.

While the Pacific salmons run with more or less regularity, year after year, two of the species exhibit, in particular streams or regions, a marked periodicity in abundance which is so well established that it can be predicted with certainty years in advance.

The Blueback, or Sockeye, in certain streams shows a climax in abundance every fourth year. This is especially marked in Puget sound and Fraser river, where the years 1905 and 1909, for example, were characterized by immense runs, while in 1906 and 1910 the abundance, as shown by the catch, was only one-fourth or one-fifth as great.

Artificial Propagation.

The artificial propagation of salmon in the streams of the Pacific seaboard began at a comparatively early date and has continued with yearly increasing extent and importance, so that at the present time more hatcheries are devoted to the Pacific salmons than to any other fishes of the western hemisphere. The vast interests at stake have appeared to warrant and to require all the money that could properly be expended by the federal and state governments for salmon culture.

The first salmon hatchery in the West was established in 1872, on the McCloud river in California. By Executive order there was set aside a large tract for a "piscicultural preserve," which was fittingly named Baird, after the first national commissioner of fisheries; and Livingstone Stone, a pioneer fish culturist, was placed in charge and continued in that capacity for many years, overcoming many obstacles, undergoing many privations, repeatedly subjected to great danger from attacks of Indians and outlaws, while devising methods which showed the possibilities of salmon culture and led to the present extraordinary development of this art.

The original Baird hatchery, still in active operation, is now supplemented by numerous other government stations, which may be regarded as lineal descendants.

The eggs of the salmons are .2 to .25-inch in diameter, and are the largest handled by the fish culturist. They are easily obtained by intercepting the fish on their way to the spawning grounds by means of racks, traps, seines, etc., and then, when exactly ripe, by expressing by firm pressure on the abdomen.

Not Easy to Handle.

The size and activity of the salmons make it necessary for two or three men to work together in holding the fish and relieving them of their eggs and milt, and the largest individuals are most readily managed by putting them in a strait jacket.

In view of the inevitable death of the salmon after spawning, an improvement over the old method of forcible expulsion of eggs is the stunning of the fish by a blow on the head and taking of the eggs by abdominal section. This, while greatly facilitating the work of the spawn-takers, adds approximately 10 per cent to the egg yield by the saving of eggs that would ordinarily be left in the abdominal cavity.

Salmon eggs hatch slowly. Incubation, beginning in late summer or early autumn, continues until the following spring or summer, depending on the temperature of the water. The most protracted period of incubation thus far coming to the notice of fish culturists is that of the red salmon at Karluk, Alaska, where eggs taken in September may not hatch until the following May or June, and in certain seasons the hatching time has been prolonged to 270 days.

The annual deposits of young salmon in the waters of the Pacific seaboard by the bureau of fisheries, the three coast states, the Province of British Columbia, and the private hatcheries in Alaska now total many millions, of which the largest quantity represents the work of the federal government.

How I Broke Into The Movies

Copyright by Hal C. Herman

By TOM MIX

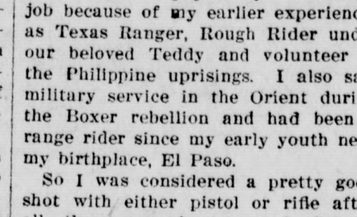
I BROKE into the movies as a safety man—a man hired to stand alongside the camera with a rifle and kill any wild animals working in the scene if they showed signs of a desire to chew up the actors. That was with the old Selig company in the days when wild animal thrillers were at their height of popularity. I won my job because of my earlier experiences as Texas Ranger, Rough Rider under our beloved Teddy and volunteer in the Philippine uprisings. I also saw military service in the Orient during the Boxer rebellion and had been a range rider since my early youth near my birthplace, El Paso.

So I was considered a pretty good shot with either pistol or rifle after all these experiences, and Colonel Selig hired me.

My reason for trying to get into the movies came about through a series of events. First I had leased my ranch to a producer who was making "Westerns." I noticed how unwestern the cowboys looked and acted and this roused something akin to resentment—a lot of tenderfeet practically making fun of the West. Then I went to see some of "these here" movies and was all-fired certain the cowboys, stories and directors were all wrong.

And I made up my mind I was going to California and tell them what was what.

Finances were pretty low. As a matter of fact I was nearly broke but I had enough money to ship my saddle horse to San Bernardino. From "San Berdue" the horse and I "hoofed it" into Hollywood with nary a brass band or reception committee to welcome us.



Tom Mix.

As a matter of fact, nobody even paid the slightest bit of attention to us. To this day a cow hand can walk through the streets of Hollywood and attract less attention than a fat man in golf knickers.

Well, then came the job I told you about—the safety man.

Soon after I worked myself into bits and small parts and doubled for the leading men on all the dangerous stunt riding.

All this time I was still nursing the urge to tell the whole world how awful the western pictures were and my opportunity came with a bang when William Fox signed me to a long term contract.

After much discussion pro and con, I finally persuaded Mr. Fox to let me try one picture of my "fourteen-karat genuine" brand of Western.

To make sure in case anything went wrong, I was certain to get the blame, Mr. Fox made me write the stories, direct them and play the leads. The results, I say with all due modesty, were far beyond my own expectations.

Their immediate success convinced many producers that Western stories written by Eastern tenderfeet and portrayed by the same breed of actors didn't have the same ring of realism in them, so my two reelers soon grew up into feature length plays.

Although what I have to say now has no bearing on "crashing the movies" I think it important to those who may be curious. I make it a business never to drink, smoke or play cards in any of my pictures.

I realize that primarily, the story of the West is of supreme interest to thousands of young boys throughout the country and perhaps the world. I also realize that boys are prone to imitate in their play many of the things they see in pictures or read about.

And with no consideration of myself except as a probable example, I realize that boys set some figures, like Babe Ruth or Lindbergh, as their ideal of manhood.

I, therefore, believe that in some little way I can convince the boyhood of America that neither smoking, drinking nor gambling are essential and that physical fitness always wins out over dissipation. That is why I try to make my characters those of men of high ideals.

Because, after all, the boys of today are the men of tomorrow.

WAVE OF LIBERALISM HOPE FOR NORMALCY

The wave of liberalism that is sweeping the nation, carrying the United States back to conditions verging on normalcy, will be asked to help give to California legalized thoroughbred racing. On June 27, the voters of the Golden State go to the polls at a special election. The ballot, containing ten measures, is one of the most liberal yet produced. Proposition No. 3 on that June 27 ballot is a measure that, pending approval by the state's voters will bring back legalized thoroughbred racing to California, where it belongs by right of heritage.

The trend towards liberalism not only in the United States but in California, is most prominently manifest at present. The day of the moralist has been placed in the limbo of forgotten dreams. Here and there an echo reamins. But it is just an echo, in its final convulsions.

Return of thoroughbred racing to California, under State supervision and legislation, with the State of California receiving a justly needed tax and revenue, will place the Golden State once again at the head of the nation's thoroughbred breeding centers, a position that California enjoyed years ago, before moralists forced a withdrawal of thoroughbred racing by the Legislature. California's voters did not eradicate racing from their State. It was the Legislation, under terrific moralist pressure, led by the same force that at present is attempting to crush the sport, that ordered the thoroughbreds out of California.

In that moment of rashness, the State's solons struck an almost fatal blow at the very heart of California. With the elimination of racing, forcing the closing of race tracks at Santa Anita, Tanforan, Los Angeles, Coronado and Ascot, breeders of thoroughbreds removed their holdings to other states. Some even went out of the country, to England and France. Such vast thoroughbred nurseries as the J. B. Haggin Rancho del Paso at Sacramento; Mira Monte Stock Farm of A. K. Macomber at San Jose; Edward Cebrian, near Santa Clara; "Lucky" Baldwin at Santa Anita, near Los Angeles; Barney Schreiber, at Emeryville; William R. Hearst, Sr., at San Simeon; William Follansbee and many, many others. This exodus of breeders of thoroughbred race horses meant a loss to the state of California of nearly $10,000,000 annually on an investment totaling approximately $50,000,000—the actual value of the farms and thoroughbreds.

At that time the thoroughbred industry in California was one of the state's leaders. California then enjoyed the honor of being the leading producers of thoroughbreds in the world, far and above Kentucky and Maryland, later the leaders and at present enjoying the top rank at the expense of California. From the Rancho Del Paso, Mira Monte and San Simeon nurseries thoroughbred kings and queens, champions of their years, went out to the markets of the world, where they commanded the highest values.

Proposition No. 3 seeks to restore that glory and revenue to California. The measure is not an attempt to place the state in partnership with the gamblers, as the moralists claim or would have the voters of the state believe. Such a charge is ridiculous. It would be just as well to say the United States is in partnership with the manufacturers of liquors and beer because a tax and revenue is realized from the sale of these beverages. It would be just as far-fetched to state that the United States is in partnership with foreign nations that import goods to America because a high tariff is placed on their goods that the government may obtain a just revenue and protect American products. Such arguments do not hold water.

It is the purpose of proposition No. 3 to bring throughbred racing back to California, under the supervision of the Legislature, with a tax and revenue that is sorely needed by the state at this time, accruing from the sport. This tax and revenue will amount to more than $1,000,000 annually, close to $2,800,000 biennially. From this tax and revenue will be realized lower taxes, aid to unemployment, support of the State Fair, county and district fairs—at this moment faced with discontinuation because of lack of financial support from the state—and support of the agriculturist.

Help Sell California To Prospective Visitors

If each of the 5,677,251 citizens of California will write to just eleven personal friends and relatives in other states to come to California this year, personal invitatons to visit California will be extended to exactly 62,449,761 prospective citizens, according to Robert Clary, of Glendale, California.

During the past twelve months, more than three-quarters of a million tourists from other states have visited California, according to Mr. Clary. Each of these 750,000 visitors, moreover, have spent an average of nearly $11 a day throughout his stay, he says. "If each of these visitors remains within our gates only two weeks," he continues, "our tourist crop is bringing in to us more than $115,000,000 per year."

Recent statistics of the All-Year Club of Southern California disclose that one out of eleven tourists visiting California becomes a permanent resident of California, and therefore a permanent customer for California's shops and stores.

JUNIOR AUXILIARY WILL ENTERTAIN

The program of Junior membership of the American Legion Auxiliary apparently is a misunderstood one to many of our members. The idea seems to be prevalent that Juniors are a separate organization.

This is an erroneous idea, as the Juniors are the daughters and sisters, under the age of eighteen years, of the members of the American Legion in good standing, and those men and women who were in the military or naval service of the United States between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and died in line of duty or after honorable discharge. Upon reaching the age of eighteen years, the Junior members automatically become members of the Senior group.

The Juniors of Daly City Unit No. 410, under the leadership of a very capable chairman, are completing a busy and successful year. During the year a play was given at Letterman hospital; they assisted in entertaining the Veterans at Christmas time; gave toys to the needy children; made scrap books for Children's Ward in the county hospital; gave Valentine party to mothers; helped sell poppies; purchased a layette; and are finishing the year by giving an entertainment and whist, the proceeds of which is to help to carry on their local welfare work. This entertainment will be put on entirely by Juniors assisted by an orchestra. Mrs. Virginia Callsen has devoted much time and energy toward the success of this program to be given in Legion Hall, 474 San Diego avenue, tonight, June 9, at 8 P. M. Following the entertainment the Juniors will be given a party by the social committee at the home of Mrs. Harry Andersen. The whist for adults will immediately follow the entertainment. Mrs. Grace Hill as whist chairman promises a good time.

Following is the program:

"Legionnaires"—Doc's Orchestra.

Four Days of Racing During Week at Tanforan

Tanforan's new program of reducing the horse racing schedule there to four days a week, instead of the customary six-day card, was inaugurated this week with greatly improved results, according to officials at tthe track. The four-day program was adopted by J. P. Atkin, operator of the San Bruno oval during the Summer meeting, for several reasons.

One of the principal reasons is Monday and Tuesday crowds at Tanforan were not all that could be desired, and the management believed a four-day program would produce better results in the way of attendance.

Another of the foremost reasons offered by Atkins is, that, with a three-day layoff, horses have more chance to rest and train, and are in better condition for racing as the result. The additional two days of rest gives stables more of an opportunity to develop the best in their horses, and consequently gives the public more spirited and faster matches, he explained.

Despite the short time the program has been in effect, Atkin said racing this week at Tanforan has shown noticeable improvement. He expected the improvement would continue, offering an increased standard of performance by the horses now stabled at the track.

Tomorrow (Saturday), instead of one feature, there will be three, providing much better money for the best mounts to contest for, and acting as an unusual attraction for the best ones to compete. There will be one handicap for two-year-olds, and and upward. R. C. MacArthur, general manager, has announced a number of improved conditions at the track, with a view to providing a snappy Summer session.

Under the terms of the will of Mrs. Emma Williams Robinson, of Olathe, Kan., hungry horses will be given Christmas dinners from a $10,000 trust fund.

It looks as if a peace conference should have no difficulty in finding a steady job.

Famous Writer Heads Breeders' Association

Peter B. Kyne, famous writer and sportsman, this week becomes president of the California Breeders Association. New members of the board of directors assuming office this week are: Miss Marion Hollins, William P. Kyne, Lindsay C. Howard, Mrs. William P. Roth and A. J. Pollack, all prominent in the business and social life of California.

With the naming of the new officials, the association begins in full swing its campaign for Proposition No. 3 providing for taxation and state regulation of thoroughbred horse racing in California.

In assuming the presidency of the organization, Kyne stressed the benefits to be derived from passage of the racing measure:

"As a Californian, with the good of the state at heart, I am bending every effort as president of the California Breeders' Association to put before the people the advantages which will result from the legalization of horse racing in California. This is a land, if ever there was one, for the development of thoroughbred horses. Racing under proper supervision will bring millions of dollars to this state, and will be of great benefit not only to the hotels, restaurants, apartments and retail merchants, but to the farmers by giving them a wider market for their produce.

"I hope the day of 'blue laws' has passed not only in California, but everywhere. More than twenty states have recently legalized horse racing and abroad they have raced for centuries. It's the grandest sport in the world and I predict Proposition No. 3 will be adopted by an overwhelming vote on June 27."

With the objectionable features of the previous measure eliminated, prominent business men, agricultural leaders, taxpayers, breeders and sportsmen are binding together in a concentrated effort to place before the people of California the true facts of the racing bill and the benefits that will result from its passage.

Now the mysterious Mr. Bullitt admits he isn't the big shot he was thought to be.

SPLINTERS

From the H. H. Smith Lumber Yard

VOLUME 5 FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1933 NUMBER 46

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Tom: "Are Paul and Alice as inseperable as ever?"

Jerry: "No, they're married now."

"I have a book you ought to read, my dear. Shall I lend it to you?"

"Heavens, no, darling! I can't even find time to read the books I ought to."

"ABERDEEN," the Coal that satisfies.

"I want an economical, comfortable machine," demanded the prospective purchaser, "and I don't want to pay more than $300 for it."

"Ah, yes," answered the auto salesman, "what you want is a four - door enclosed bicycle."

You will find about as many people who think as you think as you will who look like you.

"Let's try a bungalow, my dear—then you won't always be hearing burglars moving about downstairs."

To drive a nail through a plaster wall without injury to the wall, dip in hot water first. This will prevent it from breaking away the wall.

"A board and a nail
And a can of paint
Make many a house
Look new — that aint."

Ignorance is the mother of suspicion, hate, back-biting, lies, slander and the whole brood of evil imaginations that keep people apart.

When a community begins to believe in itself, it progresses.

A certain amount of optimism is a great help to a man. "Kites rise against and not with the wind."

Dog Catcher: "Do your dogs have licenses?"

Small Boy: "Yes, sir, they're just covered with them."

"STERLING," the Wall Board of quality.

Husband: "Don't sing that song 'Going Through the Rye,' please."

Wife: "Why not?"

Husband: "Because it reminds me that I've almost gone through mine."
